

THE ARQIS WAY

We love flipping
the script on a client's idea of "impossible".

One more idea, one different perspective,
one step further: at ARQIS we have our own way of delivering solutions that not only surpass our client's expectations, but often also our own.

THE ARQIS WAY.

The ARQIS Way?
Dr Panzer-Heemeier, how would you explain it?

The ARQIS Way reflects our mission – and how we work. We have our own way of developing concepts and solutions that are perfectly tailored to our clients’ requirements. It involved us opening up a new chapter in legal services by pooling our expertise into five focus groups:

- TRANSACTIONS
- HR.LAW
- JAPAN
- DATA.LAW
- RISK

TRANSACTIONS

When clients come to us with transactions their objective is generally business-oriented - which means we have to embrace our inner entrepreneur.

As a transaction lawyer it's all about being anything but a lawyer.

We are all passionate about the law. But in transactions that passion has to take a back seat. In private equity, mergers & acquisitions, venture capital or real estate transactions we always focus completely on the clients' business objective and adapt our legal advisory services to that objective - not vice versa.

This combination of legal know-how and business acumen enables us to provide effective support to (international) investors, investment banks, strategic investors, and also mid-caps, in all types of transactions. We have years of expertise in the health-care, industrial, consumer products and insurance sectors.

By the way, our lawyers don't just have a special affinity with the business world - many of them have also worked in commercial or investment banking roles. To support this close relationship with the business community we allow our lawyers to accept client secondments, where they are able to gain valuable additional experience that benefits our entire client base. ■

New Work brings new HR challenges.
Classic labour law alone will no longer meet them head on.

HR.LAW

The world is changing rapidly - and the world of work with it. As a result, the HR sector faces complex challenges.

Paper files containing employment contracts, tidily archived in steel filing cabinets, were the basis of traditional employment law counselling for decades. That has now all fundamentally changed. Enterprises have embraced new concepts such as matrix structures, human capital management, whistle-blowing, transformation projects, big data, artificial intelligence and crowd working, and these new aspects all have to be taken into consideration.

HR.Law by ARQIS is an innovative and holistic consultancy concept covering all legal aspects of HR - from employment law and compliance to occupational pension legislation, supervisory law and data privacy. We advise HR managers and legal departments, understand the challenges they face and collaborate with them to develop the solutions that are the best fit for their organisation. ■

The fine art of advising Japanese businesses is understanding what's said. And also what's left unsaid.

JAPAN

We not only speak Japanese, we are also familiar with the Japanese way of thinking. That's how we know that two things are particularly important to our clients: the objective and the way the objective is achieved.

The difference between what we hear and what we understand is a very important aspect of any consultation with a Japanese company because they, like all of our other clients, expect us to be solution oriented. They also expect us to achieve those solutions in a legally, morally and ethically correct way that makes good business sense. We support our clients in this process, and in all the associated internal and external processes, until we have achieved the objective together.

Clients also appreciate our more than 20 years of personal experience in advising Japanese companies. The teams at our offices in Dusseldorf and Munich advise well-known Japanese companies on their M&A and joint venture activities in Germany. In international transactions we liaise with our Tokyo office and our partner law firm, TMI Associates, which is one of the top 5 law firms in Japan. ■

By 2022, 35% of businesses will be trading data on digital marketplaces – That doesn't leave much time to secure your legal framework.

DATA.LAW

Data are a key business value driver. But how can we reduce the associated exposure to cyber, data and litigation risks?

Data, as business assets, come in the form of data ecosystems, big data, artificial intelligence, algorithms, IoT, clouds, digital transformation, digital ethics, IP rights, patents, designs and brands. These assets are continuously growing in company balance sheets as a result of digital business models and the digitalisation of analogue business models and strategies. At the same time, there are enormous cyber security, data security and litigation risks to address in order to protect the company, its employees and its stakeholders.

Data.Law is our innovative and holistic legal service for data-related issues. Our technically adept and integrated team of data consultants enables us to resolve any data issue – in its context and in its entirety. They take on and implement change projects and digital challenges together with the client on a one-stop basis, irrespective of the legal field or industry. Nationally and internationally. ■

Where there's risk, there has to be trust – thinking ahead and taking swift, effective action is the key to success.

An effective risk management strategy is indispensable to companies of all sizes in this day and age – especially in an increasingly digital world.

You only have to open the newspaper – or go online – to see the ever-increasing speed at which minor incidents can evolve into major crises. The avoidance of foreseeable risks, as well as prompt and appropriate action when unforeseen events occur, are the essential success factors that prevent an incident escalating into a crisis.

The ARQIS Risk team delivers interdisciplinary solutions to these challenges. Effective risk management is always founded on an integrated approach to risk prevention. Efficient compliance programmes are today just as indispensable to risk transfer as insurance concepts, especially in an international context. Forward-looking contract drafting is another important aspect of risk prevention. Because not every conflict can be avoided or amicably resolved, our litigation expertise is an essential element of risk management. ■

Five focus groups – and the people behind them. These people and their teams pool the necessary expertise – and one of the reasons why they are able to work so effectively is because the focus groups collaborate on an interdisciplinary basis.

All of our lawyers and legal specialists unite legal competence with business acumen. They are also committed to developing solutions that exceed client expectations.

Leaving your comfort zone often provides you with more than answers: it can also lead you to the right solution.

RECRUITING

To surpass our clients' expectations, we go the extra mile at ARQIS. And that often takes us outside our comfort zone - leading us to solutions that can be so outside the box that they often surprise us, too. We are particularly good at this because we don't just work in good teams, those teams also collaborate across all the focus groups.

For more than 15 years now ARQIS has been providing highest-level legal advice to clients on German and Japanese commercial law. As a unique big law boutique in Germany we have the degree of specialisation and level of quality of a major law firm - yet our organisational structures and work flows are purposefully streamlined and our hierarchies are flat. As a result, we provide the optimum work environment for highly competent and motivated lawyers and legal specialists.

This isn't just a claim on our part, it is actually verified. For example, the Azur magazine named us a Top Employer again in 2021.

If you are interested in learning about The ARQIS Way you're welcome to send us your application. We are always looking for motivated individuals with all levels of qualifications to join our team.
